Good afternoon

These are just some ideas about the management of paperwork, research, and support services

• set up a separate body to manage these services with full collaboration with the trained police at the front face.
• with a police support services independent body, with independent management, auditors etc, this may allow for a transparent open approach
• this will also free up trained police to put their skills to better use
• with technology evolving improvements in new platforms to support the collaboration of police and support services to easily work together
• "red tape" should protect privacy and legal rights. It also uses many hundreds of police time every year tracking down details. The court services and proposed independent support services body could liaise to easy access information legally working together to support criminal issues whilst also being the gatekeepers of the information that is not legally available to support cases.

These are just my personal ideas and look forward to turning around the negative veil that hangs over the police in media coverage etc.

Look forward to seeing if any of the suggestions are feasible and help in any way.

Warm regards and best wishes
█████████

Sent from my iPhone